I have just started reading up on the Google App Engine platform. It appears that it can be used as a back-end web server for hosting some basic web apps. The question is, would it be possible to use it as a backend for a web app that sends data to MySQL via PHP, and then stores the MySQL data in to MySQL via PHP on another computer? I am just wondering if there are any limitations with this setup, or if it is possible. It is worth noting that the data being stored on MySQL, is on an isolated server, and that data will not be used by any clients at all. A: Yes, you can, and it's a great way to put your PHP and MySQL onto AppEngine. There is a PHP data storage module, it's pretty new and not that well documented yet, but you can take a look at the source code: Q: ionic 2 : use createMultipleFilePicker over the createFilePicker I want to use this pug script :

High-speed fluoroscopic imaging of the knee using a new pulse-echo ultrasound probe. An ultrasound (US) pulse-echo scanhead (SV-2000-PT) interfaced with a digital fluoroscopic unit was used to provide the source of contrast on digital fluoroscopic images of the knee. A technique that uses low power with long duration pulses to estimate velocity was developed and applied to ten healthy volunteer knees. A kinematic model was used to obtain absolute and relative errors in the estimation of velocity during the imaging period. In order to compare the techniques, i.e., the pulse-echo and the continuous-wave approaches, a series of US images were obtained during the fluoroscopic imaging period for all ten knees. Results indicated that the pulse-echo technique provided a more accurate and repeatable estimation of the knee velocity than the continuous-wave approach when the pulses were long, and the gain control was low.

Q: How to open a url in new tab with angular2? I am trying to open a url in a new tab(new window) from my angular2 app. I have created a directive for it. I have written the HTML in the directive: `wifi` And the component where I have the directive: `@Component({ selector: 'directives', templateUrl: './directives.html' }) export class Directives{ constructor(public _htmlBody: HTMLElement){ } }` When I run the app, it shows the following error: Template parse errors: Can't bind to 'target' since it isn't a known property of 'a'. I was wondering if there was any better approach to do this task.

A: As stated in the documentation for target, its an invalid attribute on anchors, so instead try

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.3.1)?

Many have said that "The Larger Hope" by John Piper is a favorite of mine. I love the way he writes about the struggle we all go through with the deep stuff of "being honest with God" and "seeking the good for the one who sent me". What a great reminder that we each have a deep longing for God's presence and holiness in our lives, and this is our particular mission. In "Following Jesus" Timothy Keller's op-ed was the title of the column - and it is a good one, but could not be said enough in this season. Jesus' life, death, and resurrection is a nail-driven statement that our gospel is the gospel of love and forgiveness. Jesus died for us so that we can live with God forever. Hey guys, I was reading The Wait by Jean Bethke Elshstain and a line grabbed my attention: "There's a lot of 'good girls' who 'go to church.' This good girl is a nice girl. She's seen a lot of things. She thinks she knows what is right. She doesn't struggle with what she's not. So she goes to church. What she isn't aware of is that she has had a bad relationship with God, at the heart of which, is her rebellion against her mother's faith and her will to follow her own will as a matter of principle. Her good opinion of herself is blinding her to the possibility that God really exists and really loves her." I got out of bed this morning, after months of being sicker than a dog on a 2x4, and went for a walk with the new little jogging stroller. It's super small, only holds 3 and my almost 6 month old, easily gets cramped. But it has a contraption, which folds out and holds a certain amount of coffee, cream, and sugar for about $20. I've been needing some caffeine, and this was the cheapest. I'm a pastor, and tend to be intense and tired of being intense and tired, so I really appreciate Dr. David Olson's book, The Healer's Walk. It isn't a book that talks about "what to do" so much as it gently digs to the heart of how we can focus on healing, so that we can actually heal. I wrote a blog about the importance of being compassionate when feeling burned out, and Olson's book got me thinking about how it relates to being involved with ministry. Think
