(“Whenever an amendment to the Constitution has been proposed, the decision of those who advocated it is entitled to great weight, even if there are other more plausible reasons that offer a more natural interpretation of the meaning of what was adopted.”) (quoting Am. Future Sys., Inc. v. First Fin. Servs. Corp., 981 F.2d 561, 575–76 (3d Cir. 1992)). The other two canons we have discussed do not require that we disagree with Bennett that at some point there is a change in the temperature of one’s convictions. The canon that the Court is to observe a “fundamental norm of judicial conduct” does not implicate a change in beliefs or interpretation. And the canon that “the law should be stable, yet ever advancing” cannot require us to accept Bennett’s interpretation either. As we have observed, even if every applicant before 1915 has “essentially the same rights, the applicant’s rights are not equally important, for they are duties owed to the government, while the rights of others are owed
